

Samsung Heavy emphasizes safety

June 13, 2005 — Samsung Heavy Industry said yesterday that in its efforts all 21 new hires that joined its construction department this year will spend three months with the field safety management team as part of its overhauled safety program.

Each of the new employees will be stationed at the company's construction sites around the country for three months as assistant safety managers. After three months, the new employees are required to turn in field reports and improvement suggestions.

All 21 employees must also get a national safety engineer certificate.

"Considering that the company runs both shipbuilding and construction, safety is very important," said Seo Hyung-keun, vice president of Samsung Heavy Industry. He said the company has set up a revamped program to strengthen safety awareness of its employees.
